the inman company's first annual ugly kitchen contest

i'm obviously a sucker for before + afters, but i also really love contests and giveaways. the idea of winning something fantastic with no strings attached makes me jump for joy. hence my boundless enthusiasm for the inman company's first annual ugly kitchen contest. one lucky michigan family was given the title of ugliest kitchen ever, their prize, a brand new $35,000 kitchen designed by the inman company.

the big time winners just happened to be the down to earth slack family. the slack home has been in the family since the 1930s and in 1993 rick and amy slack purchased it from their aunt. initially they began remodeling the interior but after the arrival of their first child, priorities of where to spend their time and money changed, and their kitchen rehaul project was put on the back burner...until shane inman entered their lives. new cabinets, countertops, flooring, lighting, appliances, and luxury amenities were all donated by local suppliers and businesses to define the ideal family kitchen. how's that for a winner winner chicken dinner?!

The after photos are incredible, though I have to say the before kitchen isn't the worst I've ever seen. Bland and boring, absolutely, but at least it had good space to move around in. The new breakfast bar -- that's fantastic. I need one of those.
